2. Citations and explanations

1. Reference is made to the following document:

D1: DE-A-10016487

2. NOVELTY

D1, which is considered to be the closest prior art, describes a steering release device for automobile vehicles, from which the one forming the subject matter of claim 1 differs in that control of the electric servomotor is automatically interrupted by the monitoring means once a set period has elapsed, in the event that zero or quasi-zero torque or load is not reached at the end of said period.

Consequently, the subject matter of claim 1 is novel.

The subject matter of claims 2 to 6 is also novel because said claims are dependent on claim 1.

3. INVENTIVE STEP

The problem addressed by the present invention is therefore that the device described in D1 does not allow for a situation wherein a steered wheel of the vehicle encounters an immovable obstacle, such as a kerb, during the automatic release procedure, before release of the steering is achieved.

The invention solves this problem by automatically interrupting control of the electric servomotor via the monitoring means once a set period has elapsed, in the event that zero or quasi-zero torque or load is not reached at the end of said period.

This solution is not anticipated by any prior art document and, consequently, it involves an inventive step.

The subject matter of claims 2 to 6 also involves an inventive step because said claims are dependent on claim 1.

4. INDUSTRIAL APPLICABILITY

The subject matter of claims 1 to 6 can be applied in the automobile industry in the field of vehicle anti-theft systems.
